> A Trade That Grows Larger Year by Year-Expectations of the Public. Popularity of Geraniums-Azalcas and Hydrangeas-Other Blooms in Demand for Church Decoration

Local and vicinity florists have for some time been preparing for Easter. At the close of the Lenten season the dealers in blossoms and plants expect the heavy demand for flowers of all sorts. They are now cultivating plants for decorative purposes and cultivating those from which cut flowers will be sold when the season arrives. Each year there seems to be an increased call for flowering plants, both for gifts and for embellishing church audthe village of Anacostia, in the District of itoriums. Florists say that they expect Columbia, all such suitable exhibits of many thousands of dollars' worth of sales this year.

Azaleas are among the most popular of the blooming plants used at Easter. Nearly all of these plants are imported from Belgium and are received some time in October. They are kept at freezing tem-perature until the forcing process is begun. This year, as Easter comes so late, the plants will be allowed to develop nat urally and no artificial forcing will be required-unless the Lenten season happens to be a very wintry one. But though artificial forcing will probably be unn this season as great care as usual will be perfection. One of the means taken to secure this is to pinch off the new shoots which form at the base of the flower stem, and which will absorb the vigor of the plant, preventing the flowering, if allowed

Roses—that is, the two-year-old potted plants, which are sold at this time—require forcing for the same length of similar plants which are sold at Easter and which are, as a rule, intended by the purchasers to be planted out of doors late in the season. "They forget," he said "the conditions under which the plant were raised. The plants are forced int bloom, and it is hardly natural to expect them to keep on growing when they are taken out of the greenhouses and away from all the conditions which have made them what they are. People spend their money on a box of candy or a theatre ticket and are content with the recollection of the pleasure they got out of them. The don't expect them to last always. They are willing to spend their money on cut flow-ers, and they don't growl when they fade but when they buy plants they expect them to bloom on forever."

Easter lilies, both the tall Bermuda variety and the dwarf Japanese variety, are among the plants which refuse to bloom on indefinitely. But, in spite of this, the
